

EPD CHECKLIST

EPDs are now a key component of the material selection process, particularly in the building sector, as product-related environmental issues are becoming increasingly important. We've created this checklist as a guide to help you discover the best fit for your product and organization.

An EPD is a comprehensive disclosure of a product's environmental impacts during production through end of life. The data included in an EPD are based on Product Category Rules, and the report is built off of Life Cycle Assessments (LCAs). EPD Verification includes a verified, objective, and detailed review of the information in an EPD. The end result is a Product-Specific Type III EPD with third-party external verification.

EPD Process Certification is another form of EPD Verification that involves the assessment of a company's process for creating EPDs. The end result is a Product-Specific Type III EPD with third-party internal verification.
